LAW REPORT

The Jerusalem Post
March 11, 1958In the Supreme Court
Sitting as Court of Criminal Appeal

Before the Deputy President (Justice Cheshin), Justices Gonen and Landau.

Yehudi v. The Attorney General (C.A. 50/57)

Employer's Duty to Employee is Personal and Constant

The Supreme Court dismissed a 400-bill appeal against a verdict of the Tel Aviv District Court delivered on October 17, 1956 (in C.R. 400/56).

Shimon Shapiro was the contractor in charge of the construction of a four-story building in Tel Aviv, and Arye Yehudi was the sub-contractor for the building of the balcony.

Shimon Shapiro was employed by Shapiro as an unskilled laborer on the staircase, removing the refuse as it accumulated on the staircase.

On March 22, 1956, Shapiro was clearing the refuse in a rubbish bin on one of the balconies of the building.

Flu Outbreak in South Kibbutzim

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Influenza has again broken out in the Negev, though Ministry of Health physicians believe that it is not Asian Flu but the normal seasonal variety. Some cases have been reported here, but the worst hit are the kibbutzim which were spared by the Asian Flu epidemic last year.

Anti-polio booster inoculations for children who received the first and second shots last year will begin in Beer-Sheva and the Negev on March 22. Some 4,000 babies born between January 1 and October 31, 1957, will be given the first inoculation. It is hoped that all inoculations will be completed by the end of April.

In the present case, the first appellant had indeed handed over the work of erecting the balcony railings to a sub-contractor, but the latter's work had been done within the confines of the building itself and every worker had had access to his place of work. The appellant, in particular, had performed part of his task in the very places where the sub-contractor's work was carried out on the balcony, which he had been fully entitled to use.

In short, the first appellant had given the second appellant duty to take care which is owed by an employer to his employees—and he had failed in this duty by not providing a safe place of employment or warning the deceased against the dangers associated with his work.

As to the second appellant, Justice Cheshin continued, it clearly emanated from the general duty imposed on every person by law to take reasonable precautions to avoid causing damage to any person whom he can reasonably be expected to anticipate might be affected by his acts.

The second appellant should have anticipated that any unskilled laborer employed by the first appellant, who was not restricted to any particular part of the building, might come into contact with an insecure railing if not explicitly cautioned against the danger of so doing. In failing to provide the necessary warning by means of a notice or other wise—the second appellant had failed in this duty, and his negligence had been a direct factor in the deceased's death.

In considering the punishment imposed on the appellant, Justice Cheshin said that a fine of IL1,000 on the first appellant was not excessive, and the fact that the District Court had imposed a lighter punishment on the second appellant was no reason for mitigating that of the first appellant. As the Attorney-General had not appealed against the leniency of the second appellant's punishment, the court had decided not to interfere.

Appeals dismissed. Judgment given on February 22, 1958.

Justice Cheshin, who delivered the judgment of the Supreme Court, dealt firstly with the first appellant's argument that as both appellants were parties to the same offence, Judge Gonen had erred in relying on the uncorroborated evidence of the one in order to convict the other.

It is true, he said, that the rule is that an offender may not be convicted on the uncorroborated evidence of the one in order to convict the other. In this case, however, the evidence of the one in order to convict the other.

Tax Rises: Easy Way Out

TWO common denominators in the grand rush of the local council and municipalities to raise their rates, writes Hamouda (World Ag), is that not one of them has chosen the harder way out—cutting down on expenses and introducing economies. They choose, instead, the line of least resistance in the certainty that the citizens will pay up.

The Davar (Hastadrut) view is that Tel Aviv does not need higher rates since, unlike Haifa, its administrators have no programme to offer the general public. The ratepayer will thus receive no return for his taxes, for the plan is to have the religious section of the residents enjoy better amenities while the rest of the citizens pay up and say nothing.

Mapai in Opposition Hamouda (World Mirror) points out that Mapai is not in the habit of being in opposition, but when it is, it becomes obstructive. The fact is that the majority of the Tel Aviv Council has decided to raise the rates and if Mapai objects let it voice its objections above board and not resort to last week's "Parasitic" tactics.

Al Hamar (Mapai), Lamer (Ahava Ha'arava) and Kef Ha'am (Communist) are up in arms over the fact that six workers were injured in a clash with the Police at the Jewish Agency's Baranof stores last weekend. The Mapai paper punishes those who were responsible for the "accident" and demands that the Histadrut protect labourers against the design to deprive them of their daily wages. Lamer avers that no one will put up with a system of "convincing" workers with police batons and calls upon the Jewish Agency either to disassociate itself from the policy of its underlings or to accept full responsibility for what has happened; while Kef Ha'am denounces the police officer on the spot, Stenberg, who "kicked his men" onto the workers. According to the paper, he has an unusually bad record. The main blame is attributed to "the Ben-Gurion anti-labour Government."

Both Hahaker (General Zionist) and Haret take Mr. Levi Eshkol to task for having greeted Ghana on its first anniversary celebrations in the name of the Histadrut rather than in the name of the State and Hahaker recalls that someone once wrote that in 1948 the Histadrut decided to establish a branch called the State of Israel. We have long been aware, writes Haret, that it is the Histadrut which decides our foreign policy and the public too has the right to know the real facts.

Appeal Made to World For Safety of Scattered Scrolls

Jerusalem Post Reporter

An appeal to the world's conscience to place the scattered Qumran scrolls in trustworthy hands, in the light of reports that they were being left in the mercy of Beduin and antiquarians in the Arab countries, was sounded at yesterday's study meeting of the Israel Bible Research Society, in Jerusalem.

Mr. Haim Givon, the society's chairman, who made the appeal, reminded his audience of the fate that had befallen the scrolls in the past.

Mr. Givon said that the scrolls were scattered in the desert and in the hands of Beduin and antiquarians in the Arab countries.
